

Qurius wants to be Europe's leading technology company in sustainable IT

Utrecht, 29 April 2010 – At the Annual General Meeting of Shareholders, Qurius' CEO Leen Zevenbergen announced the company's vision and course for the coming years. Qurius has openly declared a target of 100 per cent sustainability by 2014 and wants to play a leading role in sustainable IT. The company is convinced that being a fully sustainable company will bring profit and transform Qurius into a more valuable and responsible member of the global community.

Leen Zevenbergen, CEO: "It's a strategic choice we're making. Even with the understanding that 'sustainability' is a broad term; we are making the public statement that we aim to be 100 percent sustainable by 2014. A fundamental change in our behavior is crucial and it is our responsibility towards the world. We believe that the ICT industry can take the lead in sustainability. We will be a technology company, inspired by innovation and willing to make the difficult choices, to both show that we care and help to make the difference."

"We aim to demonstrate that being a fully sustainable company will not create costs but drive sustainable profit. For us, it's about emphasizing the three 'Ps': People, Planet and Profit. Our approach will increase profitability because the ambition, the initiative and practical implementation of the sustainability program will attract like-minded talent and organizations to work and partner with us. We firmly believe we can and will attract new colleagues as well as new customers."
